WASHINGTON, DC – The Alliance for Longevity Initiatives (A4LI) applauds the House of Representatives for including a call for a White House Conference on Aging in this week’s Continuing Resolution. Under this directive, the conference will take place in 2025, no earlier than January 25 and no later than December 31. Its central goal is to convene a broad range of experts and advocates in the field of aging to develop policy recommendations that guide the President, Congress, and federal agencies in strengthening programs serving older Americans. Key issues to be addressed include prevention and mitigation of age-related diseases, injury, abuse, social isolation, loneliness, food insecurity, and other conditions that affect the aging population’s quality of life.

“This conference is an important milestone that underscores Congress’s commitment to prioritizing the health and well-being of older Americans,” said Dylan Livingston, Founder and CEO of A4LI. “It offers an invaluable opportunity to bring forward solutions from the full spectrum of aging-focused innovation—especially in fields like biotechnology and advanced therapeutics that hold immense promise. I’m hopeful it will attract the visionaries and trailblazers driving breakthroughs in longevity science, ultimately enabling more people to enjoy longer, healthier, and more productive lives.”

This effort presents a unique opportunity for A4LI, the Longevity Science Caucus, and other stakeholders to work closely with both the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, and the House Committee on Education and the Workforce. A4LI also congratulates Representative Tim Walberg (R-Tipton) on his recent appointment as Chairman of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce.
